

Woman's Viewpoint

THE SEASON'S QUAKER FASHIONS.

BY ANNE RITTENHOUSE.

Special Correspondence of The Star.
NEW YORK, August 2.—Last spring in Paris there was a cult for Quakerism and well there might be. The leaders of fashion went about in clothes that were entirely charming in their simplicity and quiet coloring. They were the product of exquisite workmanship, which turns simplicity away from ugliness, a fact which every woman does not quite grasp. The materials were chiffon cloth, thin silk, fine serge, and often that variety of muslin known in Catholic countries as communion cloth, because it is used for the frocks of little girls who take their first church communion. It is merely a sheer weave of organdie. These gowns were often handmade into tucks, folds, slight ruffles, all as the French said, expressing sadness.

We should have taken up this idea in fashions sooner than we did, for it spells good dressing, but the trouble is in the well known fact that we are not a nation of handmade clothing. The machine is our best friend, and as it serves us well in most cases it is made to serve us in all things. We are too impatient and too economical to spend our time in hand sewing, for those who do it in France do it out of all proportion to its worth. Those who do it, take weeks to accomplish what the continentals accomplish in days, and overhead charges are too high for our dressmakers to indulge in much of that kind of work unless the customer is willing to add dozens of dollars to the bill.

All of which is to say that finely sewed chiffon frocks which owe their charm to such work were abandoned in the beginning of their career over here by the difficulties attending their production.

The Call for Chiffon Cloth. The summer, however, quickened the fashion into life again. Silk became too hot and linen remained a problem as it does throughout all the seasons, that we have insisted upon it as the hot-weather uniform. We have found that a variety of chiffon, called chiffon cloth, which is transparent, delicately cool and wearable, was an ideal fabric for formal summer wear. It could not stand trimming in the ordinary sense, and was at its best when made up of itself.

Therefore, with the real summer on us, the fashion builders have brought out some alluring frocks of it in dull colors, untouched by other fabric or color. The fastidious women have taken to them with enthusiasm. They have comfortable linings of china silk without boning. Their economy lies in the fact that they will serve throughout the autumn and winter for house usage.

The sketch shows a gray frock of that material which was sent over from Paris and is being copied in various colors, especially in black, in white and in the gray-blue tone that the French army brought into fashion. The original model is in smoke gray, a shade that has been placed into full vorticism. The skirt has a hip yoke that is not fitted to the figure, but is sufficiently slender in its cut to give grace and not add dimension. The lower skirt is in the form of what we once called a Spanish blouse trimmed with two wide tucks above the hem. The bodice has a tucked front and is fastened as high as the chin with gray satin buttons. The sash is of the fabric.

When Color Is Added.

This unrelieved tone of smoke gray may not give pleasure or beauty to some women, so the dressmakers have copied it with sashes of blue or flame pink silk or chiffon. The mingling of pale blue in a certain shade with the gray frock is a touch to be commended. The addition of a touch of color to the dressmakers, but it takes away from the French nature of the design.

AMERICAN FASHIONS.

BY LILLIAN E. YOUNG.

This dainty midsummer dress is made of fine sheer white batiste and there are two distinct qualities of batiste, you know—that which is dressed with a bit of crispness, and the softer, mercerized variety. The former is used for this design, since it requires some body to give buoyancy to the short ruffles. It is not scratchy by any means, and when laundered loses a great part of what dressing it has, but a thin starch will lend the same desired dressing. The fronts of the blouse have desired extensions left beyond the under-arm seams, and these are drawn around to the back over the girdle and knotted below it. The lower part of the back of the blouse is trimmed with lace. The sleeves are elbow length, and are fitted with a heading along the outside of the arms.

Self-material is used for the flaring collar and turned-back cuffs. A deep girde of orchid satin joins the blouse and skirt. The dressy frock should have the flared collar of lace.

Full pleated skirts and Norfolk coats of crepe meteor make very charming dresses worn with white crepe blouses for young girls.

Sweet Pea Shades in Harlequin Arrangement.

There is a gaiety about this little summer dance frock which makes it charming for a youthful wearer. The bodice and full skirt are of sweet pea lavender tulle, over blue satin and there are two layers to the skirt, each scalloped and edged with ribbon—pink and lavender; the scallops overlapping the satin foundation. The girde of pink satin is held up by narrow straps of pink ribbon and the skirt is of lavender ribbon, matching Combination Cap and Bag.

A combination bathing cap and bag is made either in rubberized cotton or silk fabric, in black and white stripes, in colored stripes and in Scotch plaid. The bag is made in double-tier effect, the upper portions being attached to the lower by means of a heading on an elastic band. The top of the bag, which has a deep heading, is fitted with ribbon drawstrings, and while measuring only fifteen inches in depth the bag is designed to successfully accommodate bathing suit, shoes, comb, brush, etc. Upon arrival at the shore the contents of the bag are removed, the base portion inverted, the ribbon drawstrings tightened at the top and the bag is transformed into a bathing cap, the elastic heading serving as a brim.

To Clean Ribbons.

A cleaning mixture made especially for ribbons consists of gin one-half pint, honey one-half pound, soft soap one-half pound, water one-eighth pint. Mix together. Scrub the soiled portions of the ribbon with this mixture. Afterward rinse in three clean waters by dipping the ribbon up and down in them to remove all trace of the cleaning mixture. Allow the water to drip away from the ribbons and iron with a fairly hot iron under a clean muslin cloth until it is dry. If it seems too wet for ironing, wipe with a cloth before ironing dry.

Mulberry, purple, gray, tete de negre, dark brown and navy are the favorite color schemes, not forgetting the always distinguished black and white.

Picturesque Hats.

Big, shading and graceful, almost anything may be used to make it. Even the scrap bag may be resorted to in order to find odd bits of material, such as silk, cretonne, etc. Linen and straw in bright, pure colors are employed. An orange-colored straw has a white linen band and edge, with a bunch of red and yellow fruit for trimming. A hat of dark green straw is trimmed with a green band and a bunch of green grapes. A hat of sand-colored straw has red bands with yellow and blue linen flowers. A green straw hat has a crown of daisies made of yellow linen with green centers. The rim is encircled by an edge of yellow fringe. A white straw hat has flowers of white linen with blue, red or green edges and yellow centers. A black straw hat has a yellow band with red flowers and green leaves. A hat of black openwork straw is bound and banded with red linen ribbon and trimmed with three flat red and white flowers. Streamers of red linen are attached.

To Be Bottled.
Take one peck of solid ripe tomatoes, two cups of brown sugar, one-half cup of salt, one cup of chopped celery, one cup of chopped horseradish, one cup of chopped onion, one-half cup of celery seed, one-half cup of mustard seed and vinegar enough to more than cover. Slice the tomatoes in a stone jar and mix the sugar, celery, horseradish, onions and seed with the vinegar, pour over and cover all with a heavy cloth. No cooking, and they will keep a year. Delicious with cold meats.
